

Releasing student talent is what the students School do when put on the task of showing their creative outlook in the world. All students have something to say and art gives them all the freedom to express themselves in a healthy, valuable way.

For instance, sophomore Trevor Voss shows his eye for nature while at Zion National Park in early July through his talent with photography. "The landscape made me admire the beauty of nature," Voss said while being asked about the photo. In Voss' photo, he captures the various textures and aspects of nature. The purpose of this photo is to fully immerse the viewer of the photo in the beauty of the park's environment.

Photo by Trevor Voss

Inspiration goes far when a piece of art has effort and hard work put into it as sophomore Alison Manchester works on an acrylic piece out of school and out of town, "I want to frame it and give it to my niece in the future," said Manchester. Manchester took the photo and even used her own materials to point out the importance art in her life. Photo by

Alison Manchester

Disheartened and frustrated, but satisfied, senior Haley Nicholson works hard to get each line perfect for two weeks, "I knew I wanted to have two hands holding with symbolism, and I accomplished it in the end," said Nicholson.

Photo by Haley Nicholson

Expression of self was shown by junior Courtney Ellis in a piece using water color, acrylic, and book pages. "It's one of my favorite pieces I've made," said Ellis. Ellis made it to show her passion for reading and art. Photo by Courtney Ellis

In spontaneous fashion, junior Rylee Runge shows how even a random encounter can result in stunning art, "I saw the bright colors and wanted to take a photo, I was proud how well it turned out," said Runge. Photo by

Rylee Runge

Admiration of art while sitting at a wedding with nothing to do, junior Tylor Hughes uses his creative eye to make a small scene with material around him to capture an interesting moment in a quick snap of a camera, "I had nothing else to do as everybody was starting to clean up, so I took my opportunity to get this photo," said Hughes. Photo by Tylor Hughes