Junior Caleb Smith felt nervous. It had taken him a week to write the song. When his girlfriend, junior Hannah Tufano arrived at his house, he would play it for her.

He told her he was writing it. "I was nervous to tell her," he said, "I didn't know how she was gonna feel."

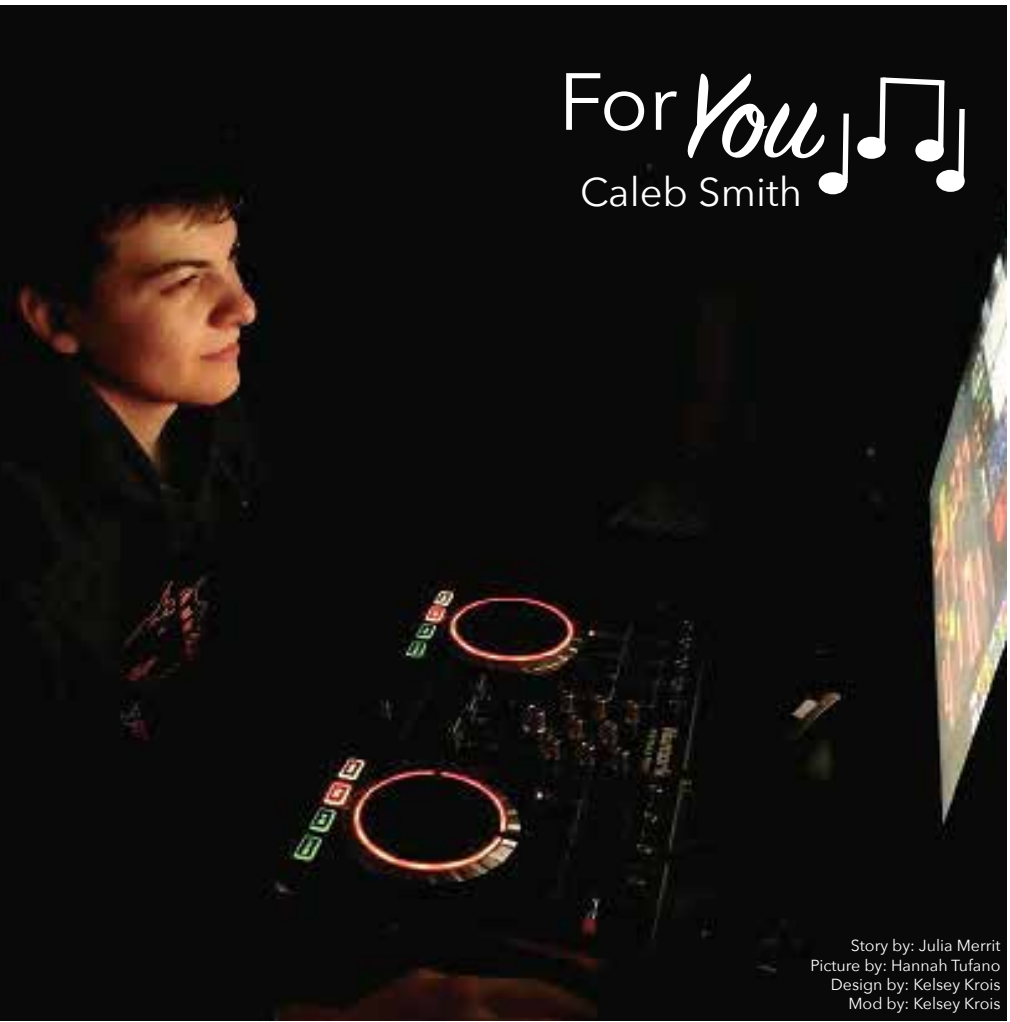

The two started dating Aug. 31 after being friends for almost six years. Wanting to do something special for her and the beginning of their new relationship, he started writing the song that day. "I felt honored when he told me that he wrote me a song," Tufano said, "It made me feel special."

The song, called "For You," had no lyrics. Using a deck DJ controller and his Mac, he found chords that sounded beautiful to him. He wanted the tone to be peaceful and relaxing.

Tufano loved the song, which relieved Smith. "I guess you could say I was feeling the same feelings I felt when told her I wrote her the song," he said.

After hearing it Tufano was delighted. "I felt like I was on cloud nine, just knowing that he wrote me a song," she said.

Tufano did not mind the song contained no words. "I felt like the song said things without really having lyrics," Tufano said. "I felt like it was honest, sweet and beautiful."
